References

Food Technol. 35(11), 50–59.

Consumption’, Chapman & Hall, New York, NY.
Meiselman, H. L. and Schutz, H. G. (2003). History of food acceptance research in Mela, D. J. (1989). A research note: a comparison of single and concurrent evaluations of sensory and hedonic attributes. J. Food Sci. 54, 1098–1100.
Technol. 38(7), 71–78, 98.
Press, Boulder, CO.
New York, NY.
Morrison, D. G. (1981). Triangle taste tests: are the subjects who respond correctly lucky or good? J. Market. 45, 111–119.
Moskowitz, H. R. (1972). Subjective ideals and sensory optimization in evaluating perceptual dimensions in food. J. Appl. Psychol. 56, 60–66.
Cosmet. Ind. 126(6), 48, 50, 52, 54, 124–126.
Mullet, G. M. (1988). Applications of multivariate methods in strategic approaches to product marketing and promotion. Food Technol. 42(11), 145, 152, 153, 155, 156.
J. Sensory Stud. 1, 55–83.
Inc., Boston, MA.

Pangborn, R. M. (1979). Physiological and psychological misadventures in sensory measurement or the crocodiles are coming. In ‘Sensory Evaluation Methods for the Practicing Food Technologists’ (M. R. Johnson, ed.), pp. 2-1–2-22. Institute of Food Technologists, Chicago, IL.

